Things to do

1. Sample some home grown whisky at the Dalmore Distillery, located on the northern shores of the Firth of Cromarty, deep in the Scottish Highlands. Originally owned by the Clan Mackenzie (with the iconic Royal stag emblem taken from the family crest), the distillery has been producing exceptional single malt whisky since 1839. thedalmore.com

2. The beautiful historic city of Edinburgh is enchanting in winter, with glittering lights on George Street and, from mid November, a traditional German Christmas market and ice rink.

3. The contemporary and edgy city of Glasgow is home to Scotland's most visited modern art gallery, The Gallery of Modern Art (GoMA). Until the end of this month, GoMA is screening a selection of artwork from Videonale.13, highlights from the 13th edition of the Biennial Festival for Contemporary Video Art. glasgowlife.org.uk

4. In rural Angus, discover the story of Scotland's ancient past at the award-winning Pictavia visitor centre. The institution tells the story of Scotland's Pictish tribes, a mysterious warrior people who roamed the area nearly 2,000 years ago, with an audio-visual show narrated by Brian Cox. pictavia.org.uk

5. For those who love the great outdoors - whatever the weather - Fort William is a major tourist attraction on Scotland's West coast that markets itself as the 'outdoor capital of the UK' due to its location near Loch Linnhe, Glen Coe and Ben Nevis.
